

IT'S SO IF IT'S IN THE LEDGER.

The Big Sandys are happy, because there is a proposition before the Kentucky Legislature to make it a penalty offense to remove the brands from logs.

If the lady who has an advertisement in THE LEDGER for a position for herself and daughter will call at this office she will hear of several good places where she can obtain a good home.

She Is Bound to Come.
A gentleman of Mt. Olivet is in receipt of information from a prominent gentleman of Dover stating that the C. and O. Railroad is seriously considering the construction of a branch road, electric or steam, to Mt. Olivet from Dover. The editor of THE Mt. Olivet Democrat has also seen correspondence from Baltimore capitalists in regard to running a line to Maysville. It's only a matter of time when some such a road will be built. There is every demand for it.

The play is not a new one by any means, being an old society play that abounds in comical situations and has a pretty and intricate plot. Nearly all the cast will introduce specialties.

HIGH-LIFE WEDDING.
Charged With Seduction, He Weds the Girl and Walks Off.

This life is curiously made up. On Saturday George G. alias "Tony" Lane was before Judge Wadsworth on a warrant charging him with seduction. Miss Nettie Skinner, a very pretty girl residing on Short street, was the complainant.

After hearing the evidence Judge Wadsworth held Lane in $500 for his appearance at the Circuit Court, in default of which he was sent to jail. A few hours more and visions of a term at Frankfort sufficed the mind and heart of Lane, and he concluded that marriage would not be a failure if it released him from Bob Kirk's castle.

So he procured a license, sent for Miss Skinner, and the Rev. Jacob Miller made them man and wife in the Clerk's Office about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. At the conclusion of the ceremony the bride departed by one route and the groom by another, with no apparent intention of traveling life's pathway together.

"THE GOLDEN."

Mr. and Mrs. Eneas Myall observe the fiftieth Anniversary of a Very Happy Event Which Occurred in Maysville, Ky.

Mr. and Mrs. Eneas Myall celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage at their beautiful suburban home, "Wind sor," on Saturday, January 27th.

All the children of the venerable couple were present with one exception. The six children who sat around the table, headed by father and mother in the seat of honor, were:

Mrs. James Walker and her husband, William Myall and wife, Miss Annie Myall, Ben J. Myall, Miss Myra Myall, Mrs. Mary Rife.

Among the other relatives present were: Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Myall, Maysville, Mr. and Mrs. George Myall, Maysville, Miss Lulu Myall, Maysville, Mrs. Jonathan Myall, Hartsboro, Mr. and Mr. E. J. Myall, Paris, Mr. and Mrs. William Walker, Flemingsburg, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Johnson, Muir, Mrs. William Myall and daughter, Paris, Mrs. Emma Jackson, Maysville, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Johnson and daughter, Millersburg.

Of the parties who witnessed the marriage of 1844 three only survive—Squires Hiram Dye and Silas Clift and Mrs. Lizzie Hawkins. The others have been gathered to their fathers.

Many costly and beautiful presents were given, among which were things suited to the domestic and art department. Seldom do you see such a gathering of presents, representing England and America, from relatives and friends, both young and old, even from the little three-year-old Tom Gullfoyle, a devoted friend of Mr. Myall.

Mrs. Orr of Flemingsburg, an honored friend of the family, was present, and added much to the pleasures of the occasion. There seemed to be a constant flow of friends calling and passing with the day, congratulating and being made happy.

In lieu of the repetition of the ceremony the church Pastor, Elder Tindler, made a golden wedding congratulatory address.

In the brief sketch we furnish below is seen an object lesson—a lesson of self-reliance and of personal independence, which the young people of to-day would do well to remember and imitate.

Eneas Myall and his brother George emigrated from England April, 1841. After a voyage of five weeks in a sail vessel they landed in New York City, from which place they turned their faces to travel Maysville, Ky., via Philadelphia, traveling in cars and canal-boats to Pittsburgh, thence in stagecoaches of the steamboat.

On arriving at Maysville they found themselves "dead broke," not having a cent and knowing no one except their uncle, Edward Myall, wife and daughter. The United States Bank had just broken and the best money was "alphabets," and work had to be had, and none at the older's trade, blacksmithing.

Remainder in Maysville two weeks, Eneas borrowed half a dollar from his uncle Edward and started in search of work, leaving the "hills city" at the purpling of the morning, and taking the Lexington Turnpike, arrived in Maysville in time to breakfast with Henry Vannoy, a blacksmith, and still no work to be had and the pilgrims passed on to Buelsville.

Remainder in Maysville two weeks, Eneas borrowed half a dollar from his uncle Edward and started in search of work, leaving the "hills city" at the purpling of the morning, and taking the Lexington Turnpike, arrived in Maysville in time to breakfast with Henry Vannoy, a blacksmith, and still no work to be had and the pilgrims passed on to Buelsville.

On arriving at Buelsville they began to inquire for work, and Thomas Holliday, proprietor of the hotel, gave each work—Eneas in the garden at fifty cents per day and George as a polisher of cutlery and waiting on the table, getting board for his labor. The great hotel, 60 feet in length and three stories high, was filled with guests and work.

Eneas continued in the cultivation of cucumbers and tomatoes for one week, and then secured work in the blacksmith shop, where he worked for three weeks at fifty cents per day.

passengers hopped out and passed through the village, but when it passed again the pilgrims found it convenient to take another ride, which brought them to the Baptist Church at Maysville.

At this second visit to Maysville Eneas was employed by Henry Vannoy to work at the blacksmith shop at $10 per month. Working eleven months, collecting the $110 due, he sent $100 to England for the passage fee of his brother Jonathan to this country.

Eneas at this time bought a set of blacksmith tools, paid $100 for them, borrowed the money from George Riley at 12 per cent stake and riding with David Jamerson and Elias Anderson, Elders of the Christian Church, as securities, which was paid in six months by the borrower.

Larkin A. Sandilge giving the ground thereupon erected a shop.

In the following January 27th, 1851, he was married to Miss Sallie Ellis, who is a native of Nicholas county. She was a Christian girl, and was baptized by Elder John T. Johnson.

Six months after marriage he bought the property of Henry Vannoy, consisting of house and lot, shop and lot, known as the Cleary property.

Jonas Myall having been here some time, joined his brother Eneas in sending to the old country for their father and sister at a cost of $200—this concluding the family except one sister in England.

From this time labor, economy and integrity have made the family what it is to day in influence and wealth. To this union of Eneas and Sallie there were born eight children—seven living and one dead—three sons and five girls, four married, three single, grandchildren, seventeen living, four dead; great-grandchildren, two, both living. Joined the Christian Church by letter from Presbyterian under Elder R. C. Ricketts in the winter of 1856, by whom he was also married. Full forty years have been spent as officer of the church.

Mr. and Mrs. Myall had the advantage of being the son and daughter of parents in reduced circumstances. If they lacked the motive of ambition they felt the stimulus of necessity and their fifty years of married happiness and business career have been a success. They have rounded the circle of life completely. Long may the devoted couple survive, ornaments of home, and examples of industry, economy and integrity.

After His Sculp.
One young fellow when asked what he thought of the Chicago fight said: "It was all right, I guess." When the pencil pushed him why he said "I guess," he told the following: "Last year I bet on Sullivan because he was the champion and had never been whipped."

"I bet with a court, and when I paid him my bet he gave me his advice. 'Don't bet on a man because he is champion. Remember the man that is going to fight him must have lots of grit and nerve, and be pretty sure that he can whip him or he would never put up the money that has to be staked in order to get up a fight.'"

"Well, I took his advice and bet on Mitchell, and lost and lost and lost. 'I did not care for that until I heard that this same man made a pocket full of money on Corbett. Now I am after his scalp.'"

The Little Tycoon.
A picturesque effect is given to the finale of the first act of that popular comic opera, "The Little Tycoon," by the use of the panorama which gives an abbreviated, but nevertheless highly effective, idea of the view which passengers on the deck of an incoming ocean steamer obtain of the approach to and from the upper and lower bays of New York harbor.

The panorama is supposed to begin on opposite Fire Island Light, at which point there is a signal station in telegraph communication with the New York News Bureau, which announces the arrival of all large vessels.

From then on the views show Coney Island, Bay Ridge, the Brooklyn Bridge, the Battery and several of the high buildings immediately adjoining, the termination being at the steamship wharf. Although the picture is one in miniature, it is really a picture which will do justice to the view which passengers on the Opera-house on the night of Tuesday, January 30th.

A Barrel of Money.
Jack Rogers, an old farmer of Mercer county, wealthy and eccentric, became alarmed last fall at the prevailing unsteadiness of the banks during the financial flurry. He had $4,000 on deposit, which he concluded to put in a safe place. He withdrew it from the bank and put it in a barrel of shelled corn in his barn. Now he would be very much pleased to get a hands on the corn again, and he is willing to entrust it to the keeping of the bank once more, but some person, unknown, who found it is keeping it for him.

This Is News.
The Augusta Reporter thus gets back at its main purpose, to be true, by insinuating that the paper would change hands.

"Nearly all of our exchanges have been busy for a week or two announcing that C. B. Morford had bought this paper. 'We know the time, they say, the time, somewhere and felt sure that time would reveal to us that we still 'had the call by the bell,' and now it comes in the shape of a card from Mr. Morford in THE Mt. Olivet Advance in which he announces his determination to practice law in that little town."

"It might be proper to add right here that instead of this paper being sold, it will bloom into a seven column semi-weekly in a few weeks, with Sam Stairs holding down the editorial chair with both feet."

"We are going to make a newspaper or quit the business, and you want to keep your eye on these columns."

CAN THIS BE SO?

Professor Blakeman Ordered From Kirkcaldy, Madison County.

The following dispatch appeared in The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette yesterday:

"Professor B. F. Blakeman, who has been in charge of Elliot Institute at Kirkcaldy, this county, has been compelled to give up his school and leave town. He recently employed a Miss Hollis of Chicago to come and take charge of the Musical Department of the college, agreeing to pay a certain salary and to retain her in the remainder of the term. She had been teaching but two weeks when Blakeman notified her that her services were not needed. He mistreated her in making settlement, and when it was noted about the citizens became indignant and let him know it to his advantage. He was then asked upon their advice and left at once. It said he came from Mercer county."

Professor Blakeman is a native of Danville and well known in this vicinity, having often visited friends in Maysville who are slow to believe all the above is true.

HOLE IN THE GROUND.

Accidentally Discovered By Fleming Boys While Hunting Rabbits.

A medium sized but extraordinary cave was discovered near Shiloh, in Fleming county, by two boys in a very peculiar manner, and with an experience that the boys do not soon want to pass through again.

They were out hunting, and chasing a rabbit into a small hole in the ground, they proceeded to dig it out. After laboring in vain for a long time they gave it up and started away.

They had not gone far when the earth began to sink behind them, and with a roar a large portion went down as though the bottom had fallen out, leaving an aperture in the surface about the size of a hoghead.

The boys made known what they had seen, and a party was sent together and an exploration made.

Joe Black, one of the party, was let down into the hole, and after descending sixty feet stood on the bottom.

Four spacious rooms were discovered, the largest 40x25 feet, and many formations and small apertures.

In one corner of the largest room was an opening into a lower apartment, but which a line was dropped thirty feet, but which was not explored.

It is supposed that this apartment is much larger than the first, and preparation is being made to make a full and complete search of the cave.

Of the curious peculiarities is the deafening noise from rumbling water in the bowels of the earth.

Attempt to Capture the Notorious Flemings.
They are Implicated in the Murder of the Mullins Family.

A Desperate Encounter Takes Place, in Which All the Parties are Killed. Two are Already Dead—Another, It is Believed, Will Die.

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 20.—Ed Hall and "Doc" Swindle, two of the men shot in the terrible fight with the Fleming boys at Boggs, Va. last Saturday, arrived here Sunday. From them was learned the full particulars of the fight, the facts of which have been so meagerly reported, owing to the inaccessibility of the town from railroad and telegraph.

Off and on since the bloody and fiendish murder of the Mullins family, nearly two years ago, by Doc Fleming, parties, named, and the Fleming boys, cent men have been on the watch and have made raids to capture the Flemings.

Most active in these raids were the Branham boys, Ed Hall and Doc Swindle. So eager and conspicuous were they that at times when they came upon the Flemings they were singled out as marks for their unerring rifles.

Escaped in the mountain fastnesses of Kentucky, and the Flemings were almost impossible to get at the Flemings. So secure they felt that they went so far as to plant a crop, one of them in women's dress, and they attended to the running of a sawmill.

The Branham crowd did not, however, give up the pursuit, but have hunted and watched for the past year. The Flemings repeatedly sent them word that they would on one day shoot any man who came within the motive of the Branham crowd in the capture, that of obtaining the reward for the bodies, dead or alive, and never from a sense of bringing the guilty to justice, now turned to a personal matter. With the Indian thirst for revenge, the Branham, Ed Hall and Doc Swindle began in the summer of 1900, at any cost their differences.

They soon made it too hot for the Flemings in Kentucky, causing them to make their way into West Virginia. Branham, Hall and Swindle followed closely after them, and on last Saturday located them in Boggs, an out-of-the-way town in West Virginia. To be sure they were not wrong in their men, in the guise of a tax collector was sent to question them. He returned with evidence sufficient to convince them they were really the Fleming boys. Branham and his party now made their preparations for the fight, which they well knew would be a fight for revenge and rather than face the hangman's noose, would make to the death.

Flemings were making some purchases in a little store when Hall, the first of three, walked fearfully in and caught Ed Fleming with one hand while he brought his pistol to bear with the other. Instantly Hennan Fleming leaved his pistol and the ball grazed the back of Hall's head, making him fly into West Virginia, where he then drew his pistol and began firing. Hall, recovering himself, drove his 44 into Ed Fleming's brain, killing him to the ground. At the same time Hennan Fleming's unerring aim had been doing deadly work. Swindle, before, either from slowness or fright, he could fire, received a bullet through the neck and made for the door. John Branham, in spite of his bravery, was lying on the floor with a hole just above the eye when the bullet through his right lung. Hall now turned his attention to Hennan, and a bloody deed followed. Standing face to face at distance, the two fought unflinchingly until, with one bullet through his chin and his hand rendered useless, Hennan Fleming ran to a back room to hide. Hennan Fleming no bullet through his chin and his hand rendered useless, Hennan Fleming ran to a back room to hide. Hennan Fleming no bullet through his chin and his hand rendered useless, Hennan Fleming ran to a back room to hide.

It can't do any more, Ed," he said, "surrender."
Branham and Ed Fleming have since died. If Hennan Fleming lives, it is not certain, it is believed that if the chance is given him he will turn state's evidence and implicate in the murder of the Mullins family men who no one for an instant suspect of being connected with such a terrible deed.
